High New Dealers Say President Will Take Action Upon His Return

TO BE PREPARED

Say Roosevelt is Displeased With Present Tempo of Rearmament

By William K. Hutchinson
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11—High New Dealers today predict that President Roosevelt will place his Administration on a "war footing" through a major reorganization of his Cabinet and national defense command shortly after he returns from vacationing in northeastern waters.

The President proposes this shake-up, New Dealers say, for the purpose of preparing his Administration for any eventuality, rather than with any specific idea of taking the United States into war either in Europe or the Orient.

Mr. Roosevelt's confidants picture him as displeased with the present tempo of American rearmament and as determined to increase its rate immediately in order to meet the new demands for American war materials due to the pledge of assistance to Russia.

Bucks County Nurseryman Found Dead in Own Truck

BURSONVILLE, Aug. 11—Robert L. Rosenberg, 33, owner of a nursery here in upper Bucks County, was found dead yesterday in the cab of a truck on his father's estate near Lansdale.

Police said that Rosenberg's body was found in the cab of the truck which had been converted into a death chamber.

The windows in the cab of the light nursery truck were closed, police said, and from the exhaust pipe into the cab there was extended a length of garden hose.

The estate on which he was found is owned by Wellington H. Rosenberg, Sr., vice president of the Lansdale First National Bank, and a prominent Democratic political leader in Montgomery county.

Robert Rosenberg, who police said disappeared a year ago and was found several days later in Scranton, suffering from amnesia, apparently had driven the truck about one-fifth of a mile off the road into a densely wooded section of the estate.

Two hikers, Charles Moyer, 14, of near Lansdale, and John Dallas, Jr., 29, of Upper Darby, found his body. They summoned Pennsylvania Motor Police.

Deputy Coroner William Y. Rambo, of Norristown, pronounced Rosenberg a suicide, and offered the theory that he had been dead four or five days. In addition to his father, Rosenberg leaves his wife, two children, and a brother, Wellington H., Jr., Norristown attorney, who is also prominent in politics.

Received from International News Service Over Special Teletype News Wire.

Soviets Putting Up Stiff Battle

Moscow, Aug. 11—Soviet forces battled mightily today to stem a Nazi drive in the Ukraine threatening encirclement of the Black Sea port of Odessa and also battle German units on the fronts facing Moscow and Leningrad.

"Throughout the night," said a new war communique, "there was fighting in the directions of Smolensk, Byelaya-Tserkov and Uman and on the Estonian sector."

Five German raiders were shot down in still another Nazi air raid on Moscow last night and early today.

Bombs fell on the Soviet capital. According to the Tass news agency, several groups of Nazi planes attempted to carry out mass raids on Moscow but they were dispersed by night fighters and anti-aircraft batteries.

This account said individual planes which broke through the city's defenses dropped high explosives and incendiaries that caused several fires in dwellings and killed and injured "some" persons.

Tass reiterated that no military objectives were damaged. No losses were suffered among Russian night fighters, it was claimed.

Meanwhile the Russian High Command admitted two new German advances—one toward the Ukrainian communications center at Uman after a drive around Kiev, and the other in the Soltsi region 120 miles from Leningrad.

Part of Odessa Endangered

Berlin, Aug. 11—German military authorities contended today that the Soviet Black Sea port of Odessa is threatened with encirclement and capture by German forces at any moment and that the city of Kiev also is gravely menaced.

Other deep German offensives were declared under way on the fronts facing Leningrad and Moscow.

Since the conflict began, said the High Command, the Soviet air force has lost more than 10,000 planes—not counting those shot down on the Finnish front.

An official announced said that about 100 German planes participated in Saturday night's heavy raid on Moscow, dropping explosive bombs of all calibers including a large number of the Luftwaffe's heaviest and thousands of incendiaries on the Russian capital.

Fisherman Reports Attempt at Hold-Up

A Philadelphia man who had been fishing in the canal at Green Lane reported an unusual incident to the Bristol police Saturday night. The police consider the incident an attempt at hold-up and are seeking someone who will answer the description given by the intended victim.

William Benner, E. Washington Lane, Philadelphia, told the police that at about 9.15 Saturday evening he was sitting in his car after having been fishing in the canal.

Suddenly a man approached the car and with an open penknife in his hand ordered Benner to get out. Benner's car was facing the roadway and instead of obeying Benner stepped on the starter and dashed away.

Before ordering Benner out of his car the man with the open penknife asked Benner "are you married or single?"

Benner describes the man as being about five feet and four or six inches in height and says that he appeared to be intoxicated.

Sergeant Perry and Officer Stackhouse went to the scene and informed others who were parked in the vicinity of what had happened. The other fishermen and those parked in the vicinity left the scene at once.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Looking Ahead

Washington, Aug. 9. RECENTLY there have been some signs in official circles of a conviction that the war will not last forever and that some thought might, even now, properly be given to the problems of the future.

It is true that there has been no really clearheaded thinking on this score, but the stage seems to have been reached where the prospect of an end to hostilities can be discussed without evoking the charge of appeasement.

THE speech of Acting Secretary of State Welles a few weeks ago, in which he envisioned a post-war co-operation of America, England and the other democracies in an effort to insure a re-established civilization against again being torn to pieces, was one evidence of this. If that speech meant anything, it meant a resurrected and revitalized League of Nations (no matter by what name it is called) in which America would play the role for which she was cast twenty-odd years ago and from which she contemptibly shrank.

IN such a league the weight of the American-British combination inevitably would dominate. Most persons will agree that world peace and international stability being to the interest of both these nations, their joint control would be the surest way to achieve those things. If they cannot be brought about in that way, at least, no suggestion of an even reasonable alternative has been made in a great many years, and certainly it is clear that the policy of isolation, which this country embraced when it rejected the League, will be utterly untenable once this conflict is over. No intelligent man thinks we can revert to that doctrine. That, at least, has been proven beyond dispute.

THE second evidence of the official look beyond the war is in the appointment by the President of the

Miss Josephine Amadio Is Wed To Mr. Henry Perotti

Church, united Miss Josephine Amadio, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carlo Amadio, 327 Washington street, and Mr. Henry Perotti, Philadelphia, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Perotti, of Italy. The three o'clock ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Father Peter Pinci.

The bridal party approached the altar to strains of organ music played by Miss Frances Tamburella. The vocalist, Miss Mary Mancini, Pond street, sang "The Rosary."

There were two attendants for the bride, Mrs. Michael Eavarone, Cedar street, as bridesmaid; and Miss Theresa Amadio, Washington street, sister of the bride, as maid of honor. Serving Mr. Perotti as best man was Mr. Alfred D'Amico, Philadelphia.

White marquisette star dust, en-train, fashioned the attractive gown worn by the bride, it having long sleeves. Her crown of rhinestones held a veil of net, edged with lace; and she carried Easter lilies.

Mrs. Eavarone and Miss Theresa Amadio, the attendants, were attired in green marquisette, the gowns having short trains, with ruffle-trimmed skirts. Their sleeves were short. Each wore tri-colored slippers in pastel tones; and headresses were of real flowers. Each maid carried a bouquet of tulleman roses.

The reception, which followed the ceremony, was held at the home of the bride's parents. Upon their return from two weeks' journey to Atlantic City, N. J., and the Pocono Mountains, Mr. and Mrs. Perotti will reside in Frankford.

ALL BODIES TO BE INTERRED IN GRAVE AT WRIGHTSTOWN

Mother Remains in Serious Condition in Doylestown Emergency Hospital

FIRE WIPES OUT HOME

House in Which Family of Eight Lived is No Longer Habitable

Five little children, all of one family, are to be buried this afternoon at two o'clock in the Friends Burying Ground at Wrightstown, Bucks County. The children will be buried, the father says, as they died—together, and in a single grave.

The youngsters were the victims of a tragedy which occurred at about midnight Saturday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Love, seven miles east of Doylestown, in Wrightstown Township. Fire believed due to an oil stove trapped the five in the second floor of their modest home.

The children, asleep at the time, were suffocated and burned beyond recognition in the two tiny bedrooms of a 150-year-old tollhouse, seven miles east of Doylestown, which had been their home until an exploding kerosene stove sent death roaring up a narrow spiral stairway.

The mother will not be able to attend the funeral of her children as she is in a serious condition in the Doylestown Emergency Hospital. She is expected to recover.

Hospital authorities are undecided whether or not Mrs. Love is aware of what has happened to her little family which in the twinkling of an eye was reduced from eight to three.

The father and the only surviving child, a son, six, have been given shelter by neighbors. They will attend the funeral this afternoon when the five victims will be buried in one grave.

Mrs. Love remains silent and very melancholy, it was stated at the hospital. "It is doubtful if she knows the full extent of the tragedy," a spokesman said.

Their father, Ernest Love, 50, a WPA road foreman, saved their six-year-old brother, Hardy, by carrying the child down the blazing stairway and throwing him through a wall of flames into the back yard.

Then, unable to get back up the stairs because of the fire and smoke, he rushed into the yard as his wife, Pauline, 42, trapped by the flames, rammed her fists through a second-story window to reach a low roof, where she lay semi-conscious for a moment before leaping to the ground.

Both of Mrs. Love's arms were severely slashed by the glass, and she was sobbing hysterically because she, too, had been unable to reach her five helpless children.

One by one, during the next four hours, smoke-grimed firemen brought out the bodies of Alice Love, 11; Edith, 9; James, 8; Duane, 4, and Paul, 2.

Firemen had to restrain the dazed and weeping father from dashing back into the flames in another rescue attempt before he was taken away for treatment of severe cuts and burns on his feet.

UNREST IN GERMANY

Sweden is in a very uncomfortable spot in this war, and Stockholm, with a Nazi pistol constantly at its head, naturally has to be very polite to Germany. Stockholm reports of growing disaffection and unrest in Germany, therefore, command more serious attention than such reports would merit if they came from other European sources.

The Swedish press, formerly under a sort of "be nice to the Nazis" censorship, has become increasingly plain-spoken in publicizing German news of the sort that the Nazis don't like. One Stockholm newspaper reports that "opposition circles are beginning to make their appearance in Germany." This paper describes in detail new Nazi repressive measures aimed ostensibly at Jews but actually enforced also against Aryans suspected of lacking enthusiasm for Hitler's war.

Another Stockholm newspaper carries an analysis of what it describes as growing German apprehension over delay in the Russian campaign. A Nazi Government alibi is seen in German newspaper stories praising the quality of Russian war material. This alibi, the Stockholm paper asserts, "must pave the way for a revision of German opinion on its conception of the strength of the Russian army."

The Nazi war lords apparently are beginning to wonder whether they have not bitten off more than they can chew in Russia—and are preparing to square themselves with the German people in case the chewing becomes too difficult. The mere fact that the Nazi chieftains are forced to give serious attention to public opinion at home is news of the biggest sort—if true.

TRAFFIC ON THE OHIO

Movement of heavy freight on the Ohio River has increased to a point where it is reported to be taxing the resources of skilled men and equipment to provide the necessary facilities.

The heyday of the inland rivers is placed in the years just preceding the Civil War. From the middle forties to the late sixties the rivers combined luxury and romance of travel and huge passenger and freight liners made history and opened up the Middle West to settlement.

The seventies saw the era of rail laying and the beginning of a decline in steamboating, but that era seems now to have reached a turning and rails struggle with highway competition as redesigned screw-propelled oilburning craft tow huge fleets of barges almost silently and smokelessly up and down the improved rivers.

The advocates of river improvement who dreamed their dreams in the early days of this century and begged for sums that now seem pitiful to build the locks and dams which make the present flow of traffic possible now have almost all passed to their reward without seeing the culmination of their hopes for the upbuilding of the great valley of the Ohio.

At times it seemed that all their effort was a waste and a mistake but in this hour of stress and urgency the rivers, flowing quietly to the Gulf, have provided a latent power which is contributing much to the defense of the nation.

Russia is reported to be harvesting the largest wheat crop in history, which should be enough to send Hitler into another rage.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol Nov. 13, 1879. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

The new railroad siding which is now being built for the accommodation of the Lehigh and Delaware Division, the rolling mill of Nevegold, Scheide & Co., Thomas B. Harkins' foundry, Joseph S. Peirce's coal yard and Joseph Sherman's plane and sash factory, is nearly completed. It is one of the big improvements of the second ward, and as three-quarters of the freight of Bristol comes from these mills, the railroad company were no doubt wise in making the outlay.

The tramps who were taken to Doylestown on Wednesday for robbing Nathan Tyler's store, were costumed in some of the clothing they had stolen. When they arrived at jail these clothes were replaced by jail suits, the stolen clothing being placed in charge of the district attorney until after the trial shall have taken place.

Thomas B. Harkins' foundry is over-run with work. Although his plant has been enlarged three or four times within the past five years to meet the demand of an increasing trade, he says that now he could profitably use double the moulding floor space that he now has. The increased trade this season he informs us is not so much on account of new customers being attracted to his mill, but chiefly because his old patrons are giving him largely increased orders.

Watson Moon, of Fallsington, sold his dog Frank for $40, and Charles Watson sold one for $25. Canines are high priced in Fallsington. A hundred dogs can be bought in Bristol for $40, but still sausage is as cheap if not cheaper in Fallsington than in Bristol.

Hopkins Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Bristol, and Neshaminy Lodge, of Hulsmeville, will be entertained at Langhorne, on Saturday evening, November 22nd, by members of the order at that place.

The new keg factory of Woods and Kellinger will be in active operation this week. They are receiving a large stock of lumber from which to make staves. About 20 men will find permanent employment there.

The large addition to the Bristol rolling mill has been completed, and the machinery is being placed therein. The new furnaces are erected, and in a week or so hoop, band and bar iron will be rolled out in double the quantities ever before produced at this establishment.

The fair for the benefit of the poor of our borough, which began yesterday at Cabene's Hall, under the management of a number of young ladies, is quite attractive, and was very well attended. The fair will continue this afternoon and evening.

GOOD POSTURE IS AN AID TO GOOD HEALTH; DEVELOPS FIGURE

By Miss Edna Stephany
(Home Economics Representative)
To develop a fine figure, you must watch your posture for good posture is an aid to good health.

Exercise regularly to achieve a perfect figure. Can you stand four inches from the base of a wall and touch the wall with your entire back? Now step away and keep the same posture. If you can, all organs are in their proper place. This is a good check-up on yourself every day. Start now so that your health will be improved.

Your clothes will look ever so much better when that "tummy" is pulled in and when the curve in your back has disappeared. All housekeeping activities can be helpful exercise to give muscle or burn up fat. When cleaning house have plenty of fresh air.

Think of your posture when doing simple household tasks. Drop to your heels and pick up things from the floor. Be sure to keep your spine straight every time you lower your body. You get the same muscular pull from this that you would from regular hip exercises.

PUPPET LOVE by Cornelius Vanderbilt Jr.

CHAPTER THIRTY

Uncle Neddy lifted his thick white brows. He turned to his nephew. "This puppet show producer seemed to be most forthright, and shall I say—scarcely an opportunist?"

"Of course she isn't," Chris agreed. "If I do find her, she'll probably have none of me. She doesn't like—millionaires."

"Her path no doubt having been strewn with them," Mrs. Bishop commented.

"Only Rodney Baddington Grant and myself—except," miserably, "she didn't know about me."

"Millions are very difficult to conceal," his uncle admitted.

"I only concealed it because I want to get rid of it—the money, I mean, though I did want what Uncle Bradley left me."

"But you shan't have it," Mrs. Bishop put in, firmly, "not while I'm executrix, and you continue to behave in this fashion. Furthermore, it's only about ten thousand dollars."

"More than enough for us, and for me to start a business. I'm going to build trailers, and then—with a super-serious look—"I'm going to Congress!"

"Men are surely spared for strange purposes," Uncle Neddy observed piously.

"At least it is my own purpose," Chris announced, getting groggily to his feet and nursing his swelling jaw with tender fingers. Washing Bedloe faded slowly out of the door and into the night, but Chris wasn't thinking of reprisals. His mind was on Nicky.

"I'm going to marry her, if she'll have me, and if we have to start from nothing, we'll start that way."

Mrs. Bishop stopped her pacing. Her thin mouth was set, her blue eyes cold, but her voice soft and gentle. "Christopher, you an only son, how can you talk of giving up your family? How long do you suppose this girl would stay with you—penniless? You've known her only for a few weeks and know nothing of her actual background. You've known Nancy all of your life. She sent the girl her sweetest smile. 'In the spring, your engagement was considered but a matter of time, which was as it should have been. You've a host of things in common. After all she has endured for you recently, you can't question her devotion.'

"Suppose you do marry this other girl. She is apparently irresponsible, impetuous and with vicious temper, judging from her attack on your ear. Those things alone would scarcely recommend her. Think how you would hate her if you had to go on living with her, seeing the futurity of your sacrifices."

Chris, then smiled as she came closer to him, and rested her slender hand on his arm. "Do be reasonable, darling. You have put mother through such a dreadful time but we can forget all that."

If it was the old insidious appeal, that had been going on for years. Chris's head was not as clear as it might have been, but clear enough to hear a familiar ring in this sweet logic. It was in this manner that Mother had talked him out of military school, talked him out of camp, talked him into Europe with a tutor at twenty-one, talked him into the firm of Burgess, Browne and Butterworth, and almost into marriage with Nancy.

His mother talked on, her hand on his shoulder, while anger mounted slowly, fiercely, and firmly in Chris's heart. Never had he been able to resist his mother in the past. She still possessed for him an aura of glamour. But he saw now that her appeal had been exercised to cheat him out of all he wanted, not for his good, really, but for the family good, for the traditional.

Uncle Neddy watched her performance critically from the background while Nancy hung on the scene with visible strain. It was cajoling on the grand scale.

"We'll drive to Tampa tonight," Mrs. Bishop was saying, "and Bedloe or someone here can bring that trailer arrangement along later."

"No, they can't. That trailer is really my own and I'm going to keep it. I couldn't go back, Mother, to be coaxed in and out of things. I've learned to do things myself. You wouldn't understand about that but it's all changed. We've talked enough. I'm going after Nicky right now, if I have to walk."

There was a deep sigh of satisfaction from Major Bishop. "What a lengthy discussion to reach a simple decision! But you shan't have to walk, my boy. You can use my trailer."

"Your trailer?"

"Oh, didn't you know? Gus and I have been travelling all over the East in it. I rather liked the notion when I talked to you, so I looked into it, arranged with the club for a vacation for Gus, and here we are! Or rather, here we go."

He started nautically for the door. "Your brother will never forgive you for this," Mrs. Bishop warned solemnly.

"Yes, he will," smiled Neddy, "and if he doesn't, what? I've done a little investigating on my own, Edith, and I find this girl comes from a good family, artistic but reputable, and . . . not a pirate in the lot, which is more than can be said for some of us, despite our sanctimonious name."

"Edward, you won't let Christopher marry her?"

"Why not? She'll undoubtedly make him a good wife, and make of him a good husband. I can see the improvement already. As I recall, Edith, while we are on the subject of the misalliance, my father did quite a bit of storming when my eldest brother married a young lady from Chicago—Edith Allen, by name—because the family money still smelled of the printing presses."

"That was different," Mrs. Bishop flushed, "and quite ridiculous!"

"Isn't it all? Good night, my dears!"

For a second Chris lingered at the door. He suddenly felt sorry for Nancy. "You'll look after Mother, won't you?" he asked feebly. "I'm sorry this happened."

She turned her head away. "My mother said I was a fool."

Chris thought of the clever and beautiful Mrs. Butterworth. If Nancy had inherited her gifts . . . but she didn't. "You're a one of the few mothers whose advice is precious," Chris commented.

With a swift kiss on his mother's cheek, he followed Uncle Neddy out of the door and across the ground to where a long, low slung trailer stood. Not as ostentatious as the Baddington Grant "Flight of Fancy," but a job de luxe.

Gus, his square, stolid face unfamiliar beneath a peaked cap, waited. "The set-ups are ready, sir," he announced.

"Ah," Uncle Neddy breathed appreciatively. "I've heard inward rumblings and callings for an hour. We're taking to the road, Gus, in search of a small circus wagon."

"I haven't an idea which direction she went," Chris admitted.

"But being no less conspicuous than a white elephant with gold tusks, I anticipate no trouble in tracing it," Uncle Neddy added.

"Come, Christopher, you need refreshments."

The interior of the trailer was a model of comfort. Deep lounge chairs and a divan that was a bed, indirect lighting, air conditioning, telephone, complete shower bath, compact kitchen, and in black and white there was . . . modern, shining and completely equipped . . . a bar!

Beside the lounge chairs were double topped tables into which glasses fitted so that a bump in the road would not upset a drink. At the rear was a screened observation platform with more club chairs and unsplittable tables. Major Bishop settled into a chair beside a table on which nested eight glasses, its full quota. Gus filled each of these carefully.

"Company?" Chris asked, taking the single glass Gus proffered.

"Our perfect system, Christopher. If I have all the drinks poured at once, it saves the annoyance of waiting between drinks and makes all of equal strength." He smacked his lips thoughtfully. "Perfect, Gus. We are now ready to depart."

THE END.

We praise Thee, O ever-loving Father, for the gift of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, Who so loved the world that He forsook the glory that was His as One of the Godhead, and took upon Himself the form of man; that as He lived He should reveal unto us the way of living, and as He died He should open up for us the Way of Life. Through Jesus Christ we pray. Amen.

EIGHT GOOD BOUTS PROMISED
FANS AT ST. ANN'S ARENA TONIGHT;
BERLY LEVERE TO MEET CLEM KINSEY

Eight good bouts are promised the fans of this section tonight at the amateur boxing show to be conducted in the St. Ann's arena, Wood and Franklin streets, by the St. Ann's Athletic Association. The bouts will be sanctioned by the Middle Atlantic district of the A. A. U.

In the main bout of the evening, a national A. A. U. champion, Berly Levere, will be seen in action and he will be pitted against Clem Kinsey, slugging colored boy from Yardley. Both Kinsey and Levere possess about the hardest hitting blows in the amateur circles.

Several weeks ago Levere was introduced in the St. Ann's ring and at the time he issued a challenge to any amateur in the middleweight class. His challenge went unheeded until accepted by Kinsey. Kinsey feels as if he could beat the national champion and asked for the opportunity.

Carman Orrino, Seibold fighter, who is fast developing into one of the best in the Middle Atlantic district, is matched with a tough foe in Frank Lowry, of the Lamb's Club. For several years, Lowry held the A. A. U. crown in his division and then a layoff put him out of condition and cost him the championship.

Lowry is attempting a comeback and recently beat Willie Crump, of the Main Line Club. Orrino also beat Crump and both wins were by the narrowest of margins. This bout is expected to be close from start to finish.

Match-maker Raecigno has also secured bouts for other fighters from this section including: Rip Kelly, Al Turner, Bill McCollie, Dick Montgomery, Kirstein, and Conrad. However, these bouts are not sanctioned as yet but most likely will be when the boys appear for weighing-in ceremonies at seven o'clock.

new Economic Commission, of which Vice-President Wallace is the head and which includes seven members of the Cabinet. It is true that the announcement creating this commission and designating the Vice-President as chairman was somewhat cloudy, and the notion was promptly promulgated that, at last, yielding to pressure, the President had named a single head with full power to co-ordinate all defense activities. That idea turns out to be just one hundred per cent. wrong. That man, unfortunately, is still to be named. Mr. Wallace and his commission are to function in the international, not the national, field and the defense organization is today just as headless and just as confused as it was before the Wallace commission came into existence.

The real idea behind the latter is to balance and co-operate with a similar economic commission in England, the joint endeavor being not only to devise and adopt such economic measures now as will aid in the blockade and embarrassment of the Axis powers but to evolve plans which, once peace has arrived, will revive international trade and reopen the channels of commerce between nations all over the world. In creating this commission the President appears to have acted wisely. It is also difficult to see how he could have done much better than put Mr. Wallace at the head, particularly as Mr. Hull, whose knowledge along these lines exceeds that of anyone else, will be on the commission.

BECAUSE of his heavy duties as Secretary of State, the President could not make Mr. Hull chairman of the commission; but his presence on it was clearly essential. The Vice-President's position made him the one man who properly could be put over the Secretary of State. Without disparaging Mr. Wallace's other qualifications, that fact had considerable to do with his selection. There was also the advantage of his youth, vigor and lack of any official burdens outside of those entailed in presiding over the Senate. It may be said that Mr. Wallace has no notion that the President has clothed him with power to become the B. M. Baruch of the defense organization. The need for such a man is very great, but Mr. Wallace is not that man, and he has no idea of trying to be.

THE really fine thing about both the Welles speech and the Wallace commission is the feeling they engender of assured victory for the Allies. Clearly, both were based on that belief. Neither means very much unless Hitler is defeated. Both, obviously, look to the post-war period. Each is indicative of confidence that peace is not too far away and that when it comes it will be an Allied peace, not a Hitler peace and not a peace negotiated with an unbeaten Hitler. Nothing could be clearer than the stand which both Mr. Churchill and the President have taken that there can be no peace until Hitler is crushed. The fact, then, that we have begun to talk and think and plan about peace tremendously strengthens the conviction that, if we neither weaken nor relax, he is sure to be crushed. Certainly that feeling is growing daily here among those who know most about the facts.

Five Children, Burned To Death, To Be Buried This Afternoon

The fire occurred shortly before midnight Saturday night. Yesterday afternoon the mother was still unaware of exactly what had happened. She lay in Doylestown Emergency Hospital, suffering from shock and with 30 stitches in her glass-slashed arms.

Shortly before 9 a. m., five hours after the last body was removed from the ruins, Love returned to the scene just as the flames broke out anew in the roof of the frame house.

Wary firemen, recalled to the site of the tragedy, at the intersection of the Doylestown-Newton pike and the Second Street pike, again had to restrain the grief-stricken father, this time from climbing up a ladder to help fight the revived flames.

The old tollhouse, which dated back to the days when tolls were charged to travelers on the highways through the county, was located directly across the Doylestown-Newton pike from the Anchor Hotel, formerly known as the Blue Anchor Inn, a hostelry which has stood since Colonial days.

Love, who has worked for the WPA for almost eight years, bought the old tollhouse for approximately $200 back in 1933. He and his wife planted a little garden at the rear of the house, to help feed their growing family, and though they were terribly crowded in the tiny house—and money was not too plentiful—they were managing to make their way.

On Saturday night, Mrs. Love heated water on the kerosene stove in the lean-to kitchen, and bathed her children in the family bathtub—a large washub.

By the time she had sent Alice, Edith and Duane to their slumbers in one of the eight-by-ten-foot bedrooms, and James, Paul, Hardy and her husband had climbed the three-foot-wide circular stairway to the other bedroom, it was 11 o'clock.

Wearily, she placed more water on the stove for her bath—and walked from the kitchen, through the drably-furnished parlor, and out the front door to the front steps, where she sat down and gratefully enjoyed the fresh air after her long labors in the hot little kitchen.

Suddenly, she smelled smoke. She had heard no blast, but the flames had shot all over the kitchen and were starting up the stairway, which was just off the kitchen, a few feet from the stove.

Screaming, she rushed up the stairs, and awakened her husband. Blindly, sleepily, he reached for the nearest child. It was Hardy, who slept in the same bed with his parents. The father rushed downstairs with the sleepy child in his arms, tossed him out into the yard, and found he could not go back because of the wall of flames on the stairway.

Mrs. Love, wildly trying to save her children, choking and gasping from the smoke, suddenly found herself near collapse. Only half aware of what she was doing, she drove her hands through a window in the bedroom occupied by Alice, Edith and Duane, and climbed out on the roof.

None of the five children, apparently, ever woke up. It was believed they were suffocated before they could rescue themselves from their beds.

Hardy, suffering slightly from shock and a few bruises, was taken to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter McNemar, at Penn's Neck.

There, the six-year-old boy who had lost all of his five brothers and sisters, slept for a few hours, got up, and heartily ate breakfast—protected from grief by his childish unawareness of what had happened to the other children.

The bodies of his brothers and sisters were taken to an undertaking establishment at Wycombe, where the father arrived later in the day to make arrangements for the funeral.

Richland Was Part Of Penn's Manor in 1681

"Teddy" Roosevelt. Besides being professor of church history at the Hartford Theological Seminary, Hartford, Connecticut, he also serves as pastor of a large rural congregation at Bally, and also has charge of the Schwenkfelder Memorial Library, Perkiomen School, Pennsburg.

Dr. Johnson has during 40 years collected thousands of old parchment deeds, some of them bearing the signature of William Penn, and some of them executed by him as early as 1681, before he ever came to America. Many of these early deeds, said Dr. Johnson, were never recorded, and hence are the only tangible evidence of any kind in many questions which still arise. Dr. Johnson cited personal instances in which he was able to furnish the evidence which settled disputes at law, by means of old deeds and other legal papers which have come into his hands, and all of which are being preserved in the fire-proof vault in the library at Pennsburg.

His territory in which he is especially interested, includes all the area drained by the Perkiomen Creek and its tributaries, extending from the center of Boyertown on the west to the center of Dublin on the east, and he has visited hundreds of homes in this area and secured from attics, old chests, old trunks and from every conceivable kind of storage place some of the most priceless documents in his possession.

Referring to the history of Richland township and Quakertown, he said this was all a part of Richland Manor deeded by William Penn in 1681. Nearly all of the early settlers were Friends or Quakers, and they held their religious services in the community, dating back as early as 1717.

The names of Roberts, Penrose, Heacock, Ball and Hicks are found among the earliest settlers. Later the Reformed, Lutheran and Mennonite people moved in and became permanent settlers.

All of this Richland tract was a part of the Great Swamp which formerly covered a large part of Upper Bucks county, but the name "Richland" indicated the fertility of the soil when drained and brought under cultivation.

Dr. Johnson made an earnest plea to the Rotarians to assist in the preservation of all old documents, and asked every one not to destroy any old papers, whatsoever, as his experience has proved the loss of many valuable papers by destruction through people who were unconscious of their value.

Guests at the Rotary meeting were John C. Reider, of Quakertown, and Rotarian George Hetherington, of Perkasie.

Plans are being made by the club to have Connie Mack as a speaker later in the Fall.

Women Active In Defense Program

"ground servicemen." Behind the establishment of each school is the talent and energy of this keen-eyed woman flier. In these more than 100 schools, co-sponsored by the WPA, Civil Aeronautics Administration and the government Office of Education, men learn to do every airport job not requiring the services of a certified mechanic.

As a member of the CAA staff, Mrs. Omile makes arrangements with airport managers for the establishment of these classes. Omaha today and Tucson, Arizona, tomorrow, wouldn't be unusual on her busy schedule.

"These men are so badly needed in our rapidly expanding aviation program that this training is of great importance," Mrs. Omile said. "This is a field that has never been exploited but these men have always been required in the industry."

"We're training groundmen but the training will make many persons air-minded. They'll continue on to be pilots or turn into mechanics, in many instances."

Men between the ages of 18 and 35 are eligible for the course and more than 1,000 have already been trained. They're taken from WPA rolls and given a thorough education in airport behavior, in care of planes and rules of the field.

Mrs. Omile's keen brown eyes and enthusiasm about the subject tally with her own record of flying hours—only two women in the United States have more hours to their credit.

She was among the pioneer women fliers and with her husband—killed later in a crash—established a flying school in Memphis, Tenn. They were instrumental in getting a study of aviation included in the curricula of Tennessee's schools as a vocational subject.

Mrs. Omile's work keeps her so busy these days she has little time for piloting—her air hours are spent in transport planes, enroute to another field to establish a ground school.

"Men have greeted this program with much more enthusiasm than we expected," she said. "People have leaped at the chance everywhere."

Enthusiastic and energetic, she remains a very feminine woman despite her flying and her work. She never wears slacks and her short cut brown hair is her only concession to her work.

Governor Phillips To Probe Bloody Jail Break

McALESTER, Okla., Aug. 11.—(INS)

Gov. Leon C. Phillips today assumed personal command of an investigation into a bloody jail break at the Oklahoma State Penitentiary yesterday, which left four men dead, including Warden Jess Dunn, and four others wounded.

In addition to Warden Dunn, those killed were Deputy Sheriff Tab Ford, 45, and two convicts, Claude Beavers, 36, leader of the desperate break, and Roy McGee, 28.

Another convict, William Anderson, 36, was so seriously wounded he was not expected to live. Also wounded were Murray Ferriss, 45, prison electrician, Robert Pollack, prison guard, and Hiram Prather, a convict.

The attempted break began about 11 a. m. Armed with long knives fashioned from old files in the prison workshop, the four desperadoes—Beavers, McGee, Anderson and Prather—jumped upon Warden Dunn and Ferriss as the two men were walking across the prison yard where the convicts had been exercising.

Placing their knives at their captives' throats, the convicts obtained the Warden's keys and under threat of death forced Dunn to order the east gate tower guards to throw down their guns.

Armed with the tower guards' shotguns, the desperadoes took Dunn and Ferriss with them as hostages, opened the prison gate and ran to an automobile parked in front of a nearby store. They sped to the outskirts of McAlester.

Expect Roosevelt To Put Administration On "War Footing" Soon

on top of the present requirements of the aid to Britain program.

While a number of high New Dealers forecast the reorganization, there is no general agreement among the President's advisers on the identity of the axe victims or their successors. Nearly all say several Cabinet heads will fall. Quite a few add that the office of Production Management is due for a major shake-up, with a single production manager replacing the present dual control, exercised by William S. Knudsen and Sidney Hillman.

One finally placed New Dealer, on intimate terms with the President, predicted the major change in the present rearmament set-up would be creation of a Department of Aviation with Presidential approval. This informant said an outstanding aviation authority—but not Charles A. Lindbergh—would be named Secretary of Aviation with Cabinet status to combine all military and civil aviation administrations in a single unit.

Another friend of the President forecast these changes:

OPM: Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas to replace Knudsen and Hillman.

Attorney General: Francis Biddle, now Acting Attorney General, to be promoted to the Cabinet.

Secretary of War: Undersecretary Robert P. Patterson to replace Secretary Henry L. Stimson.

Secretary of Labor: Daniel W. Tracy, now Assistant Secretary, and an AFL man, to replace Miss Frances Perkins.

Director of Civilian Defense: Col. William J. Donovan, now "Federal Coordinator of Information," to replace Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York, while combining the two agencies into a single organization.

Another prominent Presidential adviser agree that there will be changes in these posts, but forecast appointment of an entirely different list of successors. This adviser predicted these changes:

OPM: Undersecretary of War Patterson to replace Knudsen and Hillman.

Attorney General: Supreme Court Justice Frank Murphy to return to his former cabinet post or else Social Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt will be named as successor to Bob Jackson.

Secretary of War: Col. William J. Donovan to replace Secretary Stimson.

Secretary of Labor: Sidney Hillman, a CIO man, to replace Miss Perkins.

This adviser agreed that LaGuardia would be dropped as Civilian Defense Director because of his campaign for re-election as Mayor of New York City. He said the President felt that the Defense Directorate should be kept out of politics. This adviser, having placed Donovan in the Cabinet, said he could not forecast LaGuardia's successor.

From the trend of talk among White House advisers, it is apparent the President has decided to make important changes. By the same token, it is apparent that Secretaries Stimson and Perkins are on their way to private life. By like indications, it appears the President either has not made up his mind as to their successors or he has kept his own confidence.

But the shake-up is coming.
